

A stylized map of the African continent is shown, oriented with North at the top. The map is filled with a color gradient that transitions from green in the northern regions, through yellow and orange in the central regions, to red in the southern regions. This color scheme likely represents a temperature gradient, with green indicating cooler temperatures and red indicating warmer temperatures. The map is set against a plain white background.

